Principles Of Teaching 2 By Brenda Corpuz.pdf Principles of Teaching 2 By Brenda Corpuz.pdf Principles of Teaching 2 By Brenda Corpuz.pdf In the United States, student loans are the main source of debt among young people. More than 46 million Americans have student loans, according to the latest numbers from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. That's $1.5 trillion worth of debt for young people, and it's a fraction of the $33 trillion worth of debt that the country holds. Student loan debt has grown significantly over the past few years, but still pales in comparison to what we owe on other forms of debt. A recent analysis from Bankrate found that $30,000 in student loan debt will take an average person 40 years to pay off. It's easier to pay off the portion of debt that isn't accruing interest and has a low principal balance, so students who want to pay off their loans as quickly as possible should prioritize paying off student loans with a small principal balance, and avoid taking on new loans, instead of splurging on consumer goods. To that end, federal rules have made it easier for young people to refinance their loans. And although Congress is discussing ways to eliminate interest on federal student loans, that's not yet the case. As an industry, student loans have taken on a bad rap. It's easy to blame student loans for the student debt crisis, but as economist and author Heidi Shierholz of the Economic Policy Institute recently said in a statement, the burden on young people should be viewed differently. "Student debt may not be the immediate cause of
