Except: I want to know how to use the function to create and evaluate the formula. Because the definition of the language system is not really a function A: First of all, if you are creating a dictionary with no input, the empty string is not a valid value in Lua. So for that reason your code will fail when it tries to read the empty string. As you have mentioned in your comment, the function is written in a way to work with the main interpreter. So if your goal is to create a dictionary as an appendix to the lexicon, just write the text you want in the code and put your dictionary definition after the function. Like: `local mydict = {} function dict(str) mydict:insert(str) end` The same applies for other functions you have defined. But actually you could just use a different way to separate your code from your function. If it is a Lua file you could simply write a main function and then put your dictionaries definition after it. Like: `function main() mydict:insert("test1") mydict:insert("test2") end function main() mydict:insert("test1") mydict:insert("test2") end` Splenic hemangioendothelioma: a rare finding in a patient with a history of Hodgkin's
