Foot and ankle injuries. Although little can be done for the immediate relief of pain and swelling, most injuries to the foot and ankle can be stabilized and treated with a good outcome. Treatment options include immobilization, bracing, and rehabilitation programs. The use of orthotics and footwear may also be of help. Complications are common, and include malunion of fractures, stiffness, pain, and infection. Many of these can be treated with conservative means. In the most difficult cases, surgical intervention is often necessary.
