Tabby Cat is a simple and straightforward extension for Google Chrome that turns your New Tab page into a witty cat TV show. Gabe Kuester is a Dutch freelance blogger with a passion for education and dogs. When he's not blogging, he enjoys playing PC games, listening to music, editing pictures and traveling. Your article is absolute trash and so is the extension. You need to spend more time writing original content. You have the right to your own opinion and to critique bad software but you shouldn't write it when you've never used the extension. At the very least, take it down and apologise and/or provide an article with balanced content but do not resort to ridicule. Thanks for this review. I also think that it is a waste of time and energy to write about Google Chrome extensions that you cannot try because you are too stupid to install them. I'm not saying that the Tabby Cat or any other extension is good or bad, I'm simply saying that it is irrelevant. I'm not saying that you are stupid or that you don't understand how extensions work, I'm simply saying that you should not devote so much of your free time writing unoriginal click-bait articles that are you repeating others' claims rather than analyzing them. You say that it's a waste of time to write about extensions that you cannot try, yet you've written two articles about it and not one if you actually have tried it. For the record, I have tried the extension, and I agree with you that it's a waste of time. While I don't know where you get your "research", I use the webmaster tool of Google Chrome quite a bit and have never encountered anything like this extension. Therefore, I disagree that it's unoriginal because you and I both know that the webmaster tool doesn't really count towards Google SEO. I also fail to see how an article about a Chrome extension could have any impact on the average Google user. Hopefully in the future, you will write about things that are relevant to others, but I don't think that you will. Thanks for this review. Tabby Cat

Most of us use computers on a daily basis, and since most computers have access to the Internet, and since the Internet is probably the best way to get distracted and openheartedly welcome procrastination into your life, there's no wonder that there are tons of tutorials on how to stay clear of distractions while you are working. If, by contrast, the advice from the aforementioned tutorials do not apply to you and you have a lot of free time, and you want to see cats while you work, then, yes, you will surely want to check out Tabby Cat. One of the simplest ways to add cats in Chrome With a very appropriate name, Tabby Cat is a Chrome extension that keeps you entertained with cute, animated felines each time you open a new tab in your browser. As with all Chrome extensions, Tabby Cat can be installed with a simple mouse click from the Chrome Web Store. As expected, the extension integrates with Chrome's interface and makes its presence known via a typical icon on the right side of the address bar. From this point onward, you can say goodbye to the mundane "New Tab Suggestion Page," as it's now replaced with a cat-friendly environment for your furry friends.

Exquisitely-fabulous and randomly-generated cats at your disposal The cats, their thought-provoking names, as well as their environment are all randomly generated, so there's little chance you will get bored. Even though the cats are funny, they are not exactly interactive. You can expect them to blink, to mimic various expressions depicting sadness or happiness, or everything in between, to purr by weirdly vibrating at not very high frequencies and that's kind of about it. If you're lucky, then you might find out that some cats leave various "goodies" which can be later enabled from the shopping bag shaped button from the lower left side of Chrome's window. The goodies include a few pairs of glasses such as a pair of forever-cool RayBan Clubmasters and Steve Jobs' actual glasses, an impressive collection of versatile head accessories like hats, a crown and even a tiara, and a couple of other, typical cat accessories like a fish skeleton. What's more, if you're even luckier, you will also be able to spot one of the very few little cats that are accompanied by baby cats, which will surely make things even more outstanding. Unlock all the goodies and unleash all the kitty swag within Chrome Before we conclude
