The effects of oral administration of doxorubicin on splenic natural killer (NK) activity and serum levels of the drug were compared with those produced after intravenous administration of the agent. Previous studies from this laboratory have shown that oral administration of doxorubicin resulted in reduced splenic NK activity during acute administration and increased loss of NK activity after chronic administration. Oral administration of doxorubicin also resulted in serum drug levels that were inversely correlated with the systemic toxicity of the drug. Serum levels of doxorubicin were more than 10-fold higher after oral administration than after intravenous injection. In the present study, mice received a single oral or intravenous dose of doxorubicin (10 mg/kg) and their NK activity was then monitored for up to 7 days after drug administration. The loss of NK activity after oral administration was less pronounced during the acute (4 and 7 days) periods after drug administration than after acute intravenous administration. Furthermore, despite the fact that doxorubicin reached higher serum levels after oral administration than after intravenous injection, the duration of effects was of a similar nature and was inversely correlated with the serum levels of the drug. These results suggest that a decrease in the efficacy of therapy may occur as a consequence of oral administration of doxorubicin.package com.tencent.mm.ui.chatting; import android.content.Context; import android.util.AttributeSet; import android.view.View; import android.widget.TextView; import android.widget.Toast; import com.tencent.mm.sdk.platformtools.be; public class mh extends com.tencent.mm.ui.base.b.mh { public boolean a(int paramInt, byte[] paramArrayOfByte, String paramString, int paramInt1, int paramInt2) { boolean bool = false; String str1 = cKV().vB(paramString); 3e33713323
